

NOTES ON THE CONTRIBUTORS

Belinda A Aquino holds a PhD (Political Science) from Cornell University, an MA (Political Science) from the University of Hawaii and a BA (English) from the University of the Philippines. An internationally recognized authority on Philippine affairs, she is a professor of political science and Asian studies at the University of Hawaii at Manoa where she is also director of the Center for Philippine Studies. She was vice-president for public affairs at the University of the Philippines in 1989-1991 and a visiting professor at the Tokyo University of Foreign Studies in 1997-1998. She hails from San Fernando, La Union.

Harold Crouch is a senior fellow of the Research School of Pacific and Asian Studies, Australian National University. He has taught at the University of Indonesia, National University of Malaysia and the University of the Philippines.

Jose Y Dalisay Jr holds a PhD in English (Creative Writing) from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and teaches English at the University of the Philippines, where he is an associate professor. He has published nine books of fiction, drama, and essays, five of which have won National Book Awards from the Manila Critics Circle. He has been a Fulbright-Hays, Hawthornden, and Cambridge Seminar fellow. In 1973, he was arrested and imprisoned for subversion. In 1980, he wrote a full-length play (Pagsabog ng Liwanag) loosely based on the lives of the Lava brothers, which led to his being commissioned by the Lava family in 1996 for the biography — for publication later this year by Anvil Books. The essay published here is an excerpt from that biography.

Edmund Terence Gomez is a lecturer in the Faculty of Economics and Administration, University of Malaya, Kuala Lumpur.

Gary A Hawes joined the Manila office of the Ford Foundation in July of 1995. His primary program responsibilities are work on local governance, civic participation, and more recently, environmental protection. Before joining the Foundation, he taught comparative politics and the political economy of development at Ohio University and the University of Michigan. He is the author of articles on revolutionary movements, the comparative political economy of East Asia, and Southeast Asian political development. He has also written a book entitled The Philippine State and the Marcos Regime: The Politics of Export.

Eva-Lotta E Hedman is a lecturer in Southeast Asian and comparative politics at the University of Nottingham. She received her PhD from Cornell University. Her research focuses on questions of class formation and civil society in the Philippines, as well as comparative social movements in Southeast Asia. Her recent publications include 'In Search of Oppositions: Southeast Asia in Comparative Perspective' in Government and Opposition 32:4 (1997).

Ana Theresia 'Risa' Hontiveros-Baraquel has been with the Coalition for Peace since 1987 and is a member of various other organizations, including the socialist feminist PILIPINA. She has recently been appointed a member of the government panel negotiating peace with the National Democratic Front and will chair the panel's Reciprocal Working Committee on socioeconomic reforms. Ms. Hontiveros-Baraquel is also a television public affairs producer and co-host.

Jomo KS (Jomo Kwame Sundaram) is a professor in the Faculty of Economics and Administration, University of Malaya, Kuala Lumpur. He has an MPA and a PhD from Harvard University and was a visiting professor at Cornell University.

Carl H Lande is a professor of political science at the University of Kansas. He has published extensively on Philippine politics. Best known are his Leaders, Factions and Parties: The Structure of Philippine Politics (1965) and Post-Marcos Politics (1997).

John Sidel is a lecturer in Southeast Asian politics at the SOAS, University of London. He conducted research on local politics in Cavite and Cebu in 1990-1992 and has subsequently written several articles on local bossism as well as a forthcoming book titled Capital, Coercion, and Crime: Bossism in the Philippines. He is currently working on anti-Chinese riots in Indonesia.

Edberto M Villegas has a doctorate degree in public administration from the University of the Philippines, Diliman, and is the head of the Development Studies Program of UP Manila. He is the author of Studies in Philippine Political Economy (two editions, 1983 & 1984), The Political Economy of Philippine Labor Laws (1987) and Japanese Economic Presence in Southeast Asia (1993).